8 THINGS TO KNOW

Richard Cole, 103, last WWII Doolittle Raider, dies

Cole was part of the daring WWII attack on Japan.

Retired Lt. Col. Richard "Dick" Cole, the last of the 80 Doolittle Tokyo Raiders who carried out the daring U.S. attack on Japan during World War II, died Tuesday at a military hospital in Texas. He was 103.

Robert Whetstone, a spokesman for Brooke Army Medical Center in San Antonio, confirmed Cole's death. Whetstone had no immediate additional details.

Cole, who lived in Comfort, Texas, had stayed active even in recent years, attending air shows and participating in commemorative events including April 18, 2017, ceremonies for the raid's 75th anniversary at the National Museum of the U.S. Air Force near Dayton, Ohio.

Cole was mission commander Jimmy Doolittle's co-pilot in the attack less than five months after the December 1941 Japanese bombing of Pearl Harbor.

Doolittle died in 1993. The Gen. James "Jimmy" H. Doolittle Archives are at the University of Texas at Dallas. Cole's papers are also part of the school's History of Aviation Collection.

Cole was a Dayton-area native who recounted riding his bicycle as a child to watch planes at Mc-Cook Field, a military testing air base there. He dreamed of being a pilot and after attending Ohio University, enlisted in the Army Air Corps in 1940. Stationed in South Carolina, he signed up as a volunteer for a secret mission he knew would be dangerous, but not much else about. They trained at Eglin Air Force to fly B-25 bombers on short take-offs, in preparation for flying off an aircraft carrier.

The Raiders launched their assault April 18, 1942, in B-25 bombers from the U.S.S. Hornet. Suspecting they had been detected by Japanese patrols, they left farther away from Japan than planned.

The crews of the 16 planes were "very quiet" as they neared Japan, Cole recalled, saying his role next to Doolittle was to "be seen, not heard. ... You didn't speak until spoken to." But the country song "Wabash Cannonball" started running through his head and he unconsciously began tapping his toe, which caught Doolittle's attention. He shot Cole a look, he recalled with a laugh.

Doolittle soon ordered bomb bay doors opened, and the attack was on against what turned out to be limited anti-aircraft fire in the surprise attack.

They then headed to China, running out of fuel. Cole said Doolittle gave the command to prepare to bail out as they neared the coast, adding: "I wish you all good luck."

Cole said it was scary to parachute into a dark "unknown" in rough weather. His parachute caught in a tree, leaving him dangling but safe. Chinese partisans helped lead him and other Raiders to safety.

Three Raiders died trying to reach China, and eight were captured by Japanese soldiers. Three were executed, and a fourth died in captivity.

Cole recalled that Doolittle was distraught at first, upset that he had lost all of his planes and some of his men. Doolittle would later receive the Medal of Honor.

The raid inflicted scattered damage while providing a psychological lift back home. The stunned Japanese military diverted resources after a string of Pacific successes.

"Seven decades later, we are still awed by the sheer audacity of the Doolittle raid and the incredible men whose grit and bravery made it possible," Democratic House leader Nancy Pelosi of California said when the Congressional Gold Medal was awarded to the Raiders in a 2015 ceremony. "Though time has thinned their ranks, it will never dim the daring of their deeds."

Cole continued to fly missions in the China-Burma-India theater until 1944, and had peacetime service assignments in several states.

In an AP interview in April 2017, Cole described as "a somber affair" the toast he planned to carry out to end a long Raider tradition. Using goblets engraved with their names, they each year lifted them and sipped cognac in tribute to those who had gone before. Retired Staff Sgt. David Thatcher died in 2016 at age 94 in Missoula, Montana.

Doolittle organized reunions that became annual affairs, and Cole was a regular. He also took part in other special events, including leading a special public "final toast" ceremony at the museum in 2013, when four Raiders were still alive. He said then: "May they rest in peace."

He said in April 2017 he hadn't expected to be the last survivor, since he was older than most on the mission.

Cole attributed his longevity to being an optimist and living a life of "moderation." He said he believed he spoke for all Raiders when he said they didn't want any more recognition than all the others who put their lives on the line in the war effort.

Dykstra sues ex-teammate Darling, alleges defamation

2 Former Phillies and New York Mets outfielder Lenny Dykstra has sued ex-teammate Ron Darling, alleging defamation over comments Darling made about him in his new book. TMZ Sports reported Tuesday that the lawsuit was filed in New York. Dykstra wants Darling to pay damages for "defamation and intentional infliction of emotional distress." Dykstra, 56, also wants a judicial injunction to keep further copies of the book from being sold. Darling has stood by an allegation he made in his book that Dykstra shouted racial slurs at Boston Red Sox pitcher Dennis "Oil Can" Boyd in the 1986 World Series. "I heard what I heard and I put it in the book for a reason," Darling said last week on ESPN's "Golic and Wingo," referring to his new book titled, "108 Stitches: Loose Threads, Ripping Yarns, and the Darndest Characters from My Time in the Game." Fan sues Astros for $1M over broken finger

3 A Texas woman has sued the Houston Astros for more than $1 million, contending her left index finger was injured permanently last summer when the team mascot shot a giveaway shirt in her direction using a "T-shirt cannon." Jennifer Harughty said she was sitting behind third base last July 8 when the mascot, Orbit, launched a T-shirt at close range, resulting in a broken finger. "It was a life-changing event that I think if it happened to anybody else ... they would feel the same way," Harughty told KTRK-TV in Houston. According to the lawsuit, which was filed Monday, Harughty went to the emergency room after the game and was diagnosed with a severe fracture and told she would need surgery. Four days later, she had surgery with two screws placed in her finger. Two months later, she underwent a second surgery.

Measles outbreak in New York City has Northeast on guard

This year, the disease has surged, despite being declared eliminated in 2000.

letters@metro.us

New York City declared a public health emergency over an outbreak of measles on Tuesday, requiring unimmunized people in one neighborhood to get vaccinations, as health officials weighed in on chances of the disease spreading through the Northeast corridor.

Mayor Bill de Blasio spoke at a press conference in Williamsburg, Brooklyn, where measles has surfaced within the Orthodox Jewish community, where vaccination has been discouraged. "This is the epicenter of a measles outbreak that is very, very troubling and must be dealt with immediately," he said. "The measles vaccine works. It is safe, it is effective, it is time-tested."

De Blasio said that unvaccinated residents in certain ZIP codes of Brooklyn were required to get the vaccine, and those who didn't comply could be fined up to $1,000. The NYC outbreak follows a similar one upstate in Rockland County, with 167 cases reported as of last Friday.

This month, reports of measles hit a new weekly high nationwide, and the Northeast is the locus of the latest outbreak. According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, 465 cases have been diagnosed in 2019 — the second-highest number since measles was eliminated in the U.S. in 2000 — with New York and New Jersey accounting for more than half the cases in the country. In the first week of April, 78 cases were diagnosed, with Massachusetts reporting its first patient, the CDC said. Florida, Indiana and Nevada also reported their first cases in that time.

Per the CDC, 465 cases have been diagnosed in 2019 — the second-highest number since measles was eliminated in the U.S.

Both outbreaks in New York have been ongoing for several months and are related to travel to Israel, where there is a large ongoing measles outbreak, Dr. Thomas Clark, deputy director of the CDC's Division of Viral Diseases, told Metro. "We always worry about travel and spread of measles. Anytime measles is brought into a community with suboptimal vaccination coverage, it can spread," he said. Although Clark confirmed the report of a single case in Boston, he said the CDC had not received reports of outbreaks in Boston or Philadelphia as of Tuesday afternoon.

"We are monitoring the situation in New York, but there is no outbreak of measles in Boston at this time," Caitlin McLaughlin, a spokesperson for the Boston Public Health Commission, told Metro on Tuesday.

Although the New York City measles outbreak follows an outbreak of mumps in Philadelphia that began last month, the two diseases tend to spread for different reasons. Measles outbreaks usually result from unvaccinated people traveling to countries in which vaccination is not required. The MMR (measles-mumps-rubella) vaccine becomes less effective against mumps over time, so even people who receive it as children could develop mumps as an adult when exposed in close social environments like college, said Clark.

"Unfortunately, we see mumps despite high vaccination coverage, and we have measles when vaccination coverage is low," he said. Two doses of the MMR vaccine as a child should provide sufficient lifelong protection, but sometimes a third dose is recommended during an outbreak.

Measles is caused by a virus and is characterized by a high fever and full-body rash, which can progress toward serious complications like pneumonia and seizures, the CDC says. Experts say that anyone concerned about exposure should consult their primary care doctor about their vaccination history.

Suit filed over gun controls inspired by Pittsburgh synagogue shooting

Gun rights groups sue to block Pittsburgh from enforcing firearm legislation.

Gun rights groups sued Tuesday to block Pittsburgh from enforcing firearms legislation passed after a synagogue massacre, accusing city officials of blatantly defying the state's prohibition on municipal gun regulation.

Democratic Mayor Bill Peduto signed the bills into law in a ceremony at the City-County Building, declaring the community had come together "to say enough is enough."

"There was a lot of opposition. But more people within this city quietly showed their support," Peduto said. "We are going to take some action, we are going to do something positive and, yes, it is going to be everlasting. Change only happens when you challenge the status quo."

Minutes later, a coalition of gun rights groups sued to get the newly minted laws overturned, calling them "patently unenforceable, unconstitutional, illegal." Separately, the Allegheny County Sportsmen's League asked a judge to hold the city, Peduto and six council members who voted for the legislation in contempt of court, contending they violated a 1995 legal settlement in which city officials dropped an earlier effort to ban assault weapons and agreed to "abide by and adhere to Pennsylvania law."

"It is unfortunate that ... taxpayers will be burdened by the city's elected officials believing it is acceptable — and even gloating — that they are violating the Pennsylvania Constitution and Crimes Code," Joshua Prince, an attorney who filed both actions, wrote in a statement.

The new legislation restricts military-style assault weapons like the AR-15 rifle authorities say was used in the Oct. 27 rampage at Tree of Life Synagogue that killed 11 and wounded seven. It also bans most uses of armor-piercing ammunition and high-capacity magazines and allows the temporary seizure of guns from people who are determined to be a danger to themselves or others. The first two laws are due to take effect in 60 days, the self-harm law in 180 days.

"We are going to take some action, we are going to do something positive and, yes, it is going to be everlasting. Change only happens when you challenge the status quo."

Bill Peduto, mayor of Pittsburgh

The three bills — proposed not long after the deadliest attack on Jews in U.S. history — was weakened ahead of the vote in an effort to make it more likely to survive a court challenge.

State law has long prohibited municipalities from regulating the ownership or possession of guns or ammunition. While one of the Pittsburgh bills originally included an outright ban on assault weapons, the revised measure bars the "use" of assault weapons in public places.

A full ban on possession would take effect only if state lawmakers or the state Supreme Court give municipalities the right to regulate guns, which is seen as unlikely in a state where legislative majorities are fiercely protective of gun rights.

Gunmaker to ask Supreme Court to hear Sandy Hook appeal

AP PHOTO

Facing a newly revived wrongful death lawsuit in Connecticut over the Sandy Hook Elementary School shooting, gunmaker Remington is going to the U.S. Supreme Court to argue it can't be sued because of a much-debated federal law that shields firearms manufacturers from liability in most cases.

The Connecticut Supreme Court issued a 4-3 ruling last month saying the Madison, North Carolina-based company can be sued under state law for how it marketed the Bushmaster AR-15-style rifle used to kill 20 first-graders and six educators at the Newtown school in 2012. The decision reinstated part of a lawsuit by some of the victims' families that had been completely dismissed by a lower court judge.

The case is being watched by gun control advocates, gun rights supporters and gun manufacturers across the country, as it has the potential to provide a roadmap for victims of other mass shootings to circumvent the federal law and sue firearm makers. The federal Protection of Lawful Commerce in Arms Act has been criticized by gun control advocates as being too favorable to gun-makers since it took effect in 2005, and it has been used to bar lawsuits over other mass killings.

Remington's lawyers have notified the Connecticut high court that they intend to ask the nation's highest court to hear the company's appeal of last month's decision, according to a motion filed with the state court Friday. The company has until June to file papers with the U.S. Supreme Court.

Lawyers for Remington, Scott Harrington and James Vogts, wrote in the recent motion that the Connecticut high court "recognized that guidance from the Supreme Court is needed by acknowledging that congressional intent to protect firearm manufacturers from litigation is not clear, and it is 'possible that Congress intended to broadly immunize firearm sellers from liability' for the conduct that Plaintiffs have alleged."

In the majority opinion, Associate Justice Richard Palmer wrote that Remington can be sued under one of the few exceptions to the 2005 federal law — for claims alleging violations of laws related to the sale and marketing of firearms.

Remington is being sued by a survivor and relatives of nine victims of the Sandy Hook shooting. The plaintiffs' lawyer, Joshua Koskoff, has accused the company of targeting younger, at-risk males through "militaristic marketing and astute product placement in violent first-person shooter games."

Koskoff said Tuesday that the case "is a matter of law for the state of Connecticut."

"As Connecticut's Supreme Court said, its decision to revive the case stemmed from 'the traditional authority of our legislature and our courts to protect the people of Connecticut from the pernicious practices alleged in the present case,'" Koskoff said in a statement.

The Sandy Hook shooter, 20-year-old Adam Lanza, played violent video games. The Connecticut child advocate said Lanza's severe and deteriorating mental health problems, his preoccupation with violence and access to his mother's legal weapons "proved a recipe for mass murder."

Lanza killed his mother, Nancy, at their Newtown home before going to the school, where he killed himself as police arrived. ASSOCIATED PRESS

Loughlin, husband and 14 parents face new scam charge

Actress Lori Loughlin and her husband Mossimo Giannulli. GETTY IMAGES

The couple are accused of paying $500,000 in bribes.

"Full House" star Lori Loughlin and her fashion designer husband, Mossimo Giannulli, and 14 other parents were hit Tuesday with a new money laundering charge in the sweeping college admissions bribery scheme.

The move comes a day after fellow actress Felicity Huffman, 12 other parents and a coach agreed to plead guilty — signaling an escalation in the case against the parents who are continuing to fight the allegations against them.

Loughlin and Giannulli were among 33 prominent parents accused of participating in a scheme that involved rigging college entrance exams and bribing coaches at elite universities.

They were arrested last month on a single charge of conspiracy to commit mail and wire fraud. An indictment brought Tuesday adds a charge of money laundering conspiracy against the couple and 14 other parents.

Amy and Gregory Colburn, a California couple accused of paying $25,000 to cheat on their son's SAT, were indicted on the money laundering and mail fraud conspiracy charges last month.

The parents are accused of paying an admissions consultant, Rick Singer, to cheat on their children's college entrance exams and get their children admitted as athletic recruits at such elite schools as Georgetown and Yale.

Loughlin and Giannulli are accused of paying $500,000 in bribes to get their daughters into the University of Southern California as crew team recruits, even though neither of them played the sport.

They appeared in Boston federal court briefly last week and were not asked to enter a plea. They have not publicly addressed the allegations against them.

Other parents indicted on the new charge Tuesday include Michelle Janavs, whose family developed the microwave snack line Hot Pockets before selling their company, and William McGlashan, who co-founded an investment fund with U2's Bono in 2017.

Huffman, the 56-year-old Emmy winner who starred in ABC's "Desperate Housewives," was accused of paying $15,000 disguised as a charitable donation to have a proctor correct the answers on her daughter's SAT. She and the 12 other parents agreed to plead guilty Monday to a single charge of conspiracy to commit mail fraud and honest services mail fraud.

Prosecutors say they will seek a prison sentence that's on the low end of between four and 10 months for Huffman.

In her first public comments since her arrest, Huffman took responsibility for her actions and said she would accept the consequences.

"My daughter knew absolutely nothing about my actions, and in my misguided and profoundly wrong way, I have betrayed her. This transgression toward her and the public I will carry for the rest of my life. My desire to help my daughter is no excuse to break the law or engage in dishonesty," she said after her plea deal was announced.

Mueller report will be released within a week: attorney general

REUTERS

U.S. Attorney General William Barr told lawmakers on Tuesday that he intends to release "within a week" a redacted version of the long-awaited report on Russian interference in the 2016 presidential election from Special Counsel Robert Mueller.

During a congressional hearing, Barr was repeatedly challenged by Democrats who raised suspicions that he may have misrepresented the report to paint the Republican president in a better light.

Barr, an appointee of Trump who last month announced what he said were the main findings of the report, said he'd be as open as possible about redactions of sensitive information when he hands over the full document.

"Within a week I will be in position to release that report to the public and then I will engage with the chairmen of both judiciary committees about that report, about any further requests that they have," Barr said at his first appearance before Congress since receiving the report on March 22.

"I don't intend at this stage to send the full unredacted report to the committee," Barr told a House of Representatives Appropriations subcommittee. "I am relying on my own discretion to make as much public as I can."

Tuesday's hearing came a little more than two weeks after Mueller wrapped up a 22-month-long probe into whether members of Trump's campaign colluded with Russia during the White House race and if he obstructed official inquiries into the matter.

The impending release of the 400-page report is expected to shed light on some of the more contentious episodes of Trump's election bid and presidency, including his firing of FBI head James Comey in 2017 and his campaign's contacts with Russians.

The investigation, which Trump has repeatedly called a witch hunt, ensnared 34 people and three companies, including some members of Trump's inner circle such as his former campaign chairman Paul Manafort and former national security adviser Michael Flynn.

In a March 24 letter to Congress, Barr said that Mueller's investigation did not establish that members of Trump's election campaign conspired with Russia. He also said that Mueller presented evidence "on both sides" about whether Trump obstructed justice, but he did not draw a conclusion one way or the other. REUTERS

Man accused of claiming to be missing child to remain jailed

Ohio man had twice portrayed himself to be a juvenile sex trafficking victim.

A U.S. magistrate ordered an Ohio man to remain jailed without bond Tuesday on a charge that he lied to federal agents about being a missing child from Illinois.

Authorities charged Brian Michael Rini, 23, of Medina, Ohio, on Friday, a day after DNA testing proved he wasn't Timmothy Pitzen, who disappeared in 2011 at age 6.

"I believe Mr. Rini poses a risk of flight," Magistrate Karen Litkovitz said during a brief hearing in which Rini stood before her in a uniform from the jail with his wrists and ankles shackled.

She cited his lack of a permanent address, past mental health issues and "a lengthy criminal history" that goes back to age 13. She also noted that he had just been released on probation last month from state prison, after serving more than a year on burglary and vandalism charges.

Federal authorities said he also had twice before portrayed himself to be a juvenile sex trafficking victim, as he did in this case.

She scheduled an April 19 preliminary hearing for Rini, who was represented by a federal public defender. He could face up to eight years in prison if convicted of making false statements to federal agents.

The Butler County Jail where he's being held lists him as 5 feet, 9 inches tall and 145 pounds.

Police picked up Rini the morning of April 3 after a report that someone was wandering the streets of Newport, Kentucky. They said he told them he was Timmothy and that he had escaped two kidnappers after years of sexual abuse.

Police took him to Cincinnati Children's Hospital for treatment and testing. Federal authorities have said they were skeptical, especially after he refused to be fingerprinted but didn't want to miss a chance to possibly solve the Pitzen disappearance.

The FBI said DNA testing established his identity as a convicted felon.

In 2017, Rini was treated at an Ohio center for people with mental health or substance abuse problems, according to court papers.

Timmothy, of Aurora, Illinois, vanished after his mother, Amy Fry-Pitzen, pulled him out of kindergarten, took him on a two-day road trip to the zoo and a water park, and then killed herself at a hotel. She left a note saying that her son was safe with people who would love and care for him, and added: "You will never find him."

After Rini's account was pronounced a hoax last week, Timmothy's grandmother Alana Anderson said: "It's been awful. We've been on tenterhooks, hopeful and frightened. It's just been exhausting."

TEXTING WHILE . . .

To all of you who are so involved in the social media universe that you insist on texting while walking your dog, hear this:

"You. Dogwalker. Take your head out of your phone. You have a loved one in your care and you're missing an opportunity to experience the world together. Connect with your surroundings and share some time with each other. You'll both be better for it."

Now what do I see coming my way? Someone texting while walking with a CHILD?!?

"You. Childwalker. Take your head out of your phone. You have a loved one in your care and you're missing . . . "

You get the idea. Stop the texting and start living in the moment, together.

Aries Dealing with a close friend or relative will be difficult if you cannot agree on what's right. Walk away from situations that tempt you to do something you shouldn't.

Taurus Exaggeration will lead to trouble. Play things close to the vest and be careful about publicly discussing sensitive matters. Concentrate on getting things done.

Gemini Certain situations will need to be monitored to avoid leaks that could damage someone's reputation. Don't reveal secrets, meddle in other people's affairs or spread gossip.

Cancer Get the go-ahead if needed, and start putting your ideas to good use. A contract or settlement will change the way you think about certain past situations.

Leo Jealousy will probably set someone off, causing a disruption or feud, but as long as you go about your business and finish what you start, you'll come out on top.

Virgo Experience and learn all you can. Get involved in something you've never done before or get together with people who inspire and motivate you to expand your mind and interests.

Libra No one needs to know about your business. The less information you offer, the less interference you will face. Taking a day trip or reconnecting with someone from your past will be eye-opening.

Scorpio Surround yourself with people you feel comfortable with. Discuss your feelings and intentions. Love, romance and personal improvements will lead to greater confidence and stability.

Sagittarius Know when to walk away from a situation that isn't good for you. Don't let anger take charge when you should be putting your energy into personal gain.

Capricorn You'll see things differently if you discuss something that happened with someone who shared the experience with you. What you discover will encourage you to make a positive change.

Aquarius Move things around and make a space that will motivate you to revisit an activity you used to enjoy. Honing skills will lead to new opportunities.

Pisces Trust in your ability to get things done on your own, and avoid getting into an altercation with someone who always tries to take the reins. Help someone who appreciates you. EUGENIA LAST

The secret garden

Philadelphia Distilling is opening up a garden-themed pop-up bar in honor of its new Bluecoat Elderflower Gin

MOLLY GIVEN
Molly.Given@metro.us

Spring is finally here, and you know what that means- it's officially the start of cocktail season, and nothing makes a cocktail better than Bluecoat American Dry Gin.

Philadelphia Distilling, the makers of the award-winning Bluecoat Gin are kicking off the season with a delicious, colorful and unique gin pop-up bar: The Betsy. This fun pop-up is opening for four days only to celebrate the national release of the Bluecoat elderflower gin. Sticking with the elderflower theme, The Betsy will transform the top floor of the state-of-the-art Fishtown distillery into an enchanted forest covered in greenery, and every Philadelphian of legal age is invited out to enjoy the magic.

The Betsy will open April 11 and will be serving updelicious drinks through April 14. During this four day period, guests can indulge in some of the unique cocktail creations Philadelphia Distilling made with its elderflower gin, and also soak in the ethereal atmosphere.

The bar is decorated with lush natural decorations, canopied with illuminated orb plants and also a prime spot to catch a magnificent view of the Benjamin Franklin Bridge. The Betsy truly is the perfect backdrop to any evening-with massive bay windows and a vibrant meadow wall, anyone will feel like they've delved into another world right when they step off of the elevator. Philadelphia Distilling teamed up with the floral and garden design team at Petit Jardin en Ville to create the incredible setting and also to once again support local artists under its "United We Create" campaign.

The Betsy will feature a plethora of enticing Bluecoat elderflower gin cocktail creations, all were

"To democratize fashion we must continue to support emerging designers" NINA GARCÍA

Editor-in-chief of Elle USA chatted with Metro.

LUZ LANCHEROS
letters@metro.us

Nina García is an authority in the media field of fashion industry. Editor-in-chief of one of the most important style magazines in the world, Elle USA, has also been known by several generations of fashionistas for being a judge on "Project Runway." She has written four books that became best sellers, including "The Little Black Book of Style" (2007) and "The Style Strategy" with two versions of 2009 and 2014, among others. She is also an ambassador for the fashion and business platform of Colombia at Bogotá Fashion Week.

Metro spoke with García on the current state of the industry, the role of designers and emerging fashion places.

"Emerging designers can react faster to market changes."

What would you say to those who believe that fashion is a banal business?
Fashion is a business with a bad reputation. But what you do not see about this is that it is a very large industry that gives many jobs. It also has a very large community. There's nothing banal in that.

There are so many viral products made by Balenciaga, Gucci, Vetements... How to know that they are not made just to create a buzz?
The social networks are a challenge. Well, they could also be a blessing. We can use them to communicate a story, to reach our customers, learn what they need, create an own website, do e-commerce… Have platforms such as Moda Operandi. But the other side of that is that there are many voices. So many that today it is very difficult to stand out or be different. So, I always advise designers who want to emerge and use these networks, which are so powerful, to first focus on the design, own point of view and approach. And have a coherent story. That story will be featured in the media day by day.

Nina Garcia with Elaine Welteroth, Brandon Maxwell, Frances Berwick, Karlie Kloss and Christian Siriano, attending the release of 'Project Runway' in New York. | GETTY

Do you think that Europe is losing ground to other fashion capitals, such as Shanghai and Lagos?
I do not think so. Paris, Italy, and England are still very strong. The field of global fashion has opened. But there are opportunities for Colombia, for example, because what has happened with these mega-brands is very monotonous and similar. If we talk about design in emerging places, we see that Mexico, Brazil, are making handmade fashion. But what makes all these countries different? Mexicans, for example, have their own way of doing things. They have an own point of view.

How do you democratize fashion?
I think we have to continue supporting the emerging talents.

How do you be authentic?
You have an advantage when you are an emerging designer. When business is small, it's possible to react faster to changes on the market. The market is moving very fast and mega brands are very big to do so. And that is a great strength that small designers have. I know that there is a great lack of resources, but all that brings creativity. You have to have that facility to be able to achieve it and have an intuition about at what stage the market is now and how it is moving.

What designers do you consider to be game-changers?
This season it seems to me that Hedi Slimane (French photographer and fashion designer) with his work at Céline again showed how trends move. He overturned everything we saw in big cities.

'I could act the rest of my life'
KIERNAN SHIPKA

At just 19, the star of "Chilling Adventures of Sabrina" has lived the challenges of being a child celebrity since the days of "Mad Men." Shipka talks with Metro about the success of the Netflix production and the current state of Hollywood.

GERTY OYARCE VÁSQUEZ, MWN

Kiernan Shipka was only nine when she received her first award: a SAG for playing Sally Draper in one of the most acclaimed series of the last decade, "Mad Men." Her role — a problematic and ingenious girl dealing with the divorce of her parents — was acclaimed until she became a definitive part of the production cast.

She has been called one of the best actresses of her generation and a rising star we should keep an eye on. According to media sources such as Indie Wire, Shipka obtained her first leading role in "Chilling Adventures of Sabrina," a dark and reinvented version of the '90s series "Sabrina the Teenage Witch."

Metro talked with Shipka about the success of the series and the second season that will be released in April, the challenges she faced taking on this role, the #MeToo movement and other aspects of her career.

ALL PHOTOS NETFLIX

At 19, you have already accomplished a lot. How do you see that success?
I feel very grateful for the roles I have performed, because they have had a big influence on my life. The further my work goes, the further my daily life goes, and I love that.

How did you prepare to play Sabrina?
I prepared for approximately three-and-a-half months before starting to shoot a couple of episodes and discover her as a character and person. I think that discovery is really important to complete a role that you will do for a long time. And honestly, it was just practice.

Melissa Joan Hart's Sabrina meant a lot to '90s pop culture. Did you ever feel the pressure to live up to her or look like her?
Not really, to be honest. I feel that the show from the '90s was very unique and was very valuable for people. It was very important in its segment and it was great. It's there, it's a guide, but it is also there to hopefully improve the show that will also bring interest and happiness to the audience. But both series are so different that I never felt that pressure, so I try to throw those worries out the window.

What does Sabrina mean to you? Do you see yourself reflected in her in any way?
In some aspects she is very different from me. I think Sabrina is a really interesting and strong girl, growing up in a world where the innocence she grew up with is over. And I think that's a fairly common growth experience, having those moments that open your eyes. There are other aspects where she has different falls than I do, and in many aspects, she is younger than me. We live very different lives. She is very funny, very powerful and I feel that she really is a winner.

Did you expect this success?
I knew we had an expectant fan base, but even so, I was nervous and anxious to see what everyone thought. I'm very happy that people like it and I'm excited to do more episodes. Especially because they are really fun!

In the next season, your character is expected to be darker. Could you give us a clue as to what is coming?
Many scenes are coming. Many facts and moments that are really huge.

When you were little you had a role in "Mad Men." What did that mean to you? What did you learn at that time from your peers?
I learned almost everything I know about my work, to be honest. I started when I was six and I liked being able to watch incredible actors, writers and directors in many aspects. I learned a lot from what I know about acting there, and it was an incredible experience for me.

What do you do to overcome the stress and pressure?
It's important to keep on going and take care of yourself. It is different for everyone, but for me it is all about sleeping well at night and being honest with myself, with how I feel. It is important to get off work and disconnect.

Which actresses are you currently inspired by?
There are so many! I mean, I've seen incredible performances this year. I loved "The Favourite" and Rachel Weisz's performance. Julianne Moore has had the coolest roles I've ever seen. It's great to see good movies and be inspired by them over and over again. There's nothing like that for me.

The #MeToo movement had great success in your area. What do you think about it? What actions do you do to support other women?
I think the #MeToo movement is really important. I'm so happy that such a powerful movement is happening right now. I feel like I had a very fortunate and protected childhood in many ways, and I grew up with a lot of very powerful women around me, and seeing them come through and creating this huge movement and seeing them say "enough is enough" is totally incredible. I hope to do my best to support other women in the industry. That is extremely important to me, to listen to them and to defend ourselves. It's amazing.

TRUMP'S MLB-CUBA DECISION A FOOLISH ONE

PANTORNO'S PERCH

JOE PANTORNO
@JoePantorno

It's getting harder for sports journalists and reporters to "stick to sports" when President Donald Trump is starting to take on Major League Baseball.

Monday afternoon saw the Trump administration overturn an Obama administration decision that allowed Cuban baseball players to sign contracts directly with Major League Baseball teams, putting an end to the United States' first progressive step in improving relations with Cuba.

The original decision, which was finalized by the Trump administration toward the start of his term, ensured a safe path for Cuban ballplayers to make it to the United States.

In year's past, Cuban ballplayers who wished to play in the majors had to defect from the country and rely on the likes of smugglers and gangsters to get them out before attaining a US work visa from a different foreign country.

Somehow, human trafficking was a minuscule upgrade from the hundreds of players who opted to take a dinghy for the dangerous, approximately 100-mile journey across the Straits of Florida to make it to the United States.

The deal finalized by Trump last year allowed MLB teams to pay the Cuban Baseball Federation (CBF) a release fee that equaled 25-percent of the player's signing bonus, rather than paying those smugglers and gangsters.

Under the 60-year embargo between the countries, however, the United States has basically made it illegal to make payments to the Cuban government. While Major League Baseball argued that the CBF was not apart of the Cuban state, the government is believed to play a prominent role in every aspect of life in the country, including sport.

On paper, it's an understandable decision simply because Major League Baseball would be breaking the law if those payments to the CBF were going to the government.

But what is a 60-year-old gripe worth compared to human lives? President Trump's lack of consideration of that remains overwhelmingly concerning.

In an attempt to sway the President's decision, Major League Baseball included some of the harrowing stories of current ballplayers, which Yahoo's Jeff Passan noted that it "did nothing to sway Trump Administration."

Chicago White Sox slugger Jose Abreu was forced to eat his fake Haitian passport on his flight to the United States, Cincinnati Reds outfielder Yasiel Puig was held hostage in Mexico by smugglers linked to the country's drug cartel who attempted to sell him to the highest bidder before being kidnapped.

Cleveland Indians outfielder Leonys Martin was also kidnapped and held in Mexico while the rest of his family was sent to Texas after walking out on the Cuban national team during the 2010 World Baseball Classic in Japan.

Deceased pitcher Jose Fernandez, who rose to fame with the Miami Marlins before being killed in a boating accident in 2016, was caught four times trying to escape from Cuba and was jailed for almost a year as a 14-year-old. Injured Mets star Yoenis Cespedes was also separated from his family for almost two years in his attempt to make it to the United States

In a country that makes it nearly impossible to leave without risking one's life, the revocation of the Cuba deal will put hundreds of lives back in danger.

And for what? To get out of poverty and achieve a dream of playing baseball. While the country is one of the powers on the international baseball landscape, players make as little as $50 per month in Cuba.

So now, vulnerable, young ballplayers looking for a better life will find themselves back in the hands of international gangsters and criminals, who are the only people benefitting from the President's decision on Monday.

It's a hypocritical move for the Trump administration, which has continuously slammed the Cuban government for its poor human rights record.

At this point, it's par for the course for this President, who continues to find new ways to put lives at risk for his personal agenda.

"The Masters is the first golf major that our guests can bet on, and we're excited to be able to offer it for the first time in Philadelphia," SugarHouse Vice President and General Counsel Evan Davis told MetroBet. "We have plenty of wagering options beyond who will win the tournament, such as best finishing position between two players, or if an individual will make the cut. And for anyone who's looking ahead, we're already taking action on the other three majors as well.

Vegas Golden Knights vs. San Jose Sharks

The Golden Knights have posted a perfect 4-0 record in their last four games following a game where they allowed five goals or more and they have that same 4-0 record in their last four conference quarterfinal games. The Sharks, on the other hand, have struggled a bit in the spot they are in tonight as they have lost six of their last eight home games and they have really limped into the playoffs, going just 3-9 in their last 12 games overall. Throw in the fact that the Golden Knights have dominated the Pacific Division, going 44-21 in their last 65 while the underdog is 4-1 in the last five head-to-head meetings between the two teams and we're taking Vegas at the small dog price to get the win in San Jose on Wednesday evening.

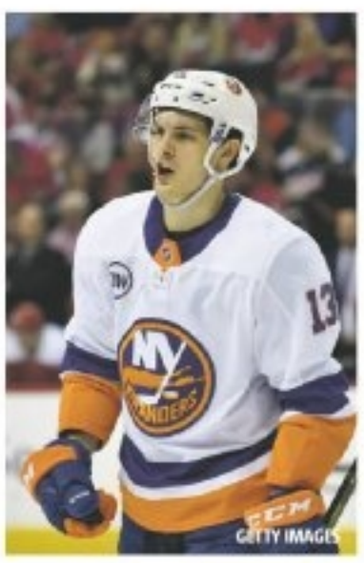
Sports betting 101: What is a moneyline?

VSiN

Moneylines are the simplest type of bet. In a moneyline wager, bettors make bets simply on who will win the game. This does not involve any point spreads or margins of victory. This form of betting odds focuses just on who will be the outright winner. Let's take a look at an example. Let's say the Islanders odds are -150, while the Penguins' odds are +130.

The first thing to take notice of is the plus and minus sign in front of the number. The team with a plus sign in front of the odds is the underdog—in this case, the Penguins. Because of this fact, they can potentially earn a higher payout if they win. The number in the odds means something slightly different depending on whether it has a positive or negative sign in front of it. With its odds set at +130, a Penguins bet offers a $130 payout for every $100 bet on it. So if someone were to bet on the Penguins, and the Penguins won, that person would win $130.



GETTY IMAGES

A minus sign at the beginning of odds means the team is favored to win. The number indicates how much someone would need to wager in order to win $100. So if someone were to place a $150 bet in favor of the Islanders and the Islanders won the game, that person would win $100. If that person were to bet $300 instead, and the Penguins still won, they would win $200. JEFF FOGLE

A betting breakdown of the Stanley Cup playoffs

Can the Islanders continue to stun the hockey world?

VSiN

After a "shock the nation" season in the National Hockey League, the New York Islanders begin their 2019 playoff campaign Wednesday night at home against the Pittsburgh Penguins (NBCSN, 7:30 p.m.).

New York was a longshot to make the playoffs before the season began. VSiN hockey consultant Andy MacNeil reports that Westgate priced "No" to make the playoffs at a whopping -300 (risk $30 to win $10 on "no," or anything in that ratio), while "Yes" paid back at +240 (risk $10 to win $24 on "yes").

You could argue that the Isles were the biggest surprise in the league. Tampa Bay technically topped its market projection by the most points (using Westgate numbers from MacNeil's archives). But, that was just the obvious "best team" being even better than expected. It wasn't a surprise that the Lightning were lethal. The Islanders stunned observers.

BEATING EXPECTATIONS

- TAMPA BAY +20.5 (128 points/107.5 projected)
- NY ISLANDERS +19.5 (103 points/83.5 projected)
- MONTREAL +15.5 (96 points/80.5 projected)
- CAROLINA +14.5 (99 points/84.5 projected)
- CALGARY +13.5 (107 points/93.5 projected)

GETTY IMAGES

New York will have to keep pulling surprises to advance through the playoffs. Despite owning home ice advantage, the Islanders are an underdog to push past the Penguins. Pittsburgh is -140 to win the best-of-seven series at William Hill sportsbooks in New Jersey. A bet on New York to advance would pay +120.

In Wednesday's opener, William Hill has the Islanders at pick-em. You should expect a similar line for all the Isles' home games in this series. Pittsburgh will a pricey home favorite in games two, three, and six (if necessary). That's why the Penguins are a series favorite without home ice. The games in New York are seen as coin flips that are likely to split out. Pittsburgh is expected to dominate at home.

On the futures board to win the Stanley Cup, the Islanders are tied for the biggest longshot at 35/1 with Carolina and Colorado. Here's a quick look at the latest from William Hill.

FAVORITE: Tampa Bay 12/5 (+240)

SERIOUS THREATS: San Jose 8/1, Vegas 17/2 (+850), St. Louis 9/1, Calgary and Boston both 10/1, Washington 11/1, Nashville 13/1, Pittsburgh and Winnipeg both 16/1.

LONG SHOTS: Toronto 20/1, Columbus and Dallas both 30/1, Colorado, Carolina, and NYI all at 35/1.

Can the Islanders keep surprising what appears to be a still-skeptical market? We just saw defense win another championship in the NCAA basketball tournament. New York had the best defense in the league this past season, allowing a paltry 2.33 goals per game. JEFF FOGLE

Phillies and Sixers betting previews

NATIONALS AT PHILLIES

Nationals skipper Dave Martinez and Phillies manager Gabe Kapler will be hoping for productive starts from Jeremy Hellickson (0-0, 9.00 ERA) and Nick Pivetta (1-0, 6.52 ERA), respectively, but it's more than likely that these lineups will tee off on the starters at Citizens Bank Park on Wednesday night.

Hellickson makes his first start of 2019; he was roughed up in his lone start against the Phillies last year (4.2 innings, seven hits, two walks, three runs), and Philadelphia's newest bats have solid numbers against him. J.T. Realmuto is 10-for-33, Bryce Harper is 5-for-18 with two home runs, and Andrew McCutchen is 4-for-11 with five walks. He also has to watch for outfielder Odubel Herrera and shortstop Jean Segura, who are swinging hot bats at the moment.

Pivetta has done horribly against Washington in the past, going 1-4 with a 9.93 ERA in seven appearances. Third baseman Anthony Rendon has been especially lethal, going 6-for-12 with three home runs and six RBI. First baseman Ryan Zimmerman is 5-for-9 lifetime against Pivetta, while outfielder Juan Soto is 3-for-7. The Nats' offense is seventh in baseball so far at 5.4 runs per game. The play: Nationals vs. Phillies Over

BULLS AT SIXERS

The Chicago Bulls (22-58) and Philadelphia 76ers (50-30) just played on Saturday, with the Sixers emerging the clear victors, 116-96. The Bulls are clearly looking ahead to the draft lottery, as they've dropped six of their last seven games. So even with Philadelphia resting some of their best players like shooting guard J.J. Redick and center Joel Embiid, they should still coast their regular season finale despite the large spread. The play: Sixers -15

Hoskins thriving in new-look Phillies lineup

The Phillies slugger is putting up big-time power numbers to start the season.

JOE PANTORNO
joseph.pantorno@metro.us

Rhys Hoskins was averaging one home run per every six at-bats entering Tuesday night's game. GETTY IMAGES

Following the aggressive offseason spending program of the Philadelphia Phillies, a potent offensive attack was expected.

JT Realmuto, Jean Segura, Andrew McCutchen, and most notably, Bryce Harper provided an influx of protection for the lineup's returning big bats.

At a power perspective, Harper's acquisition offered the promise of creating a potent duo at the No. 3 and cleanup spot alongside the Phillies' homegrown slugger, Rhys Hoskins.

With Harper garnering the potential of accumulating 30-plus home runs annually, especially now that he's moved to a much more hitter-friendly home in Citizen's Bank Park, Hoskins is poised to equal that same kind of output.

And possibly even exceed it.

Multiple projection programs and predictions slated the 26-year-old — who is just a year younger than Harper but has five fewer seasons of experience — to slug between 35 and 40 home runs batting behind Harper in the Phillies lineup.

After all, Hoskins lived up to the hype in his first full MLB season last year when he hit 34 round-trippers with 94 RBI in 153 games. That was in a far more tame Phillies lineup, too.

With the foursome of upgrades, Hoskins is thriving in the Phillies' cleanup spot as he's hit five home runs with 15 RBI in his first nine games entering Tuesday night's matchup with the Washington Nationals. Two of those came in the solo variety during Monday night's 4-3 victory over Harper's former team.

The big night saw him averaging one home run per every six at-bats, which was tops in the National League.

It's a scorching start, especially compared to last season when Hoskins didn't hit his fifth home run last season until May 5, his 32nd game of the year.

Obviously, the current 85-home-run pace he's on will not last this season, but it's more than fair to expect that Hoskins will set a new career high in home runs.

While the power has been impressive, Hoskins' average has also shown signs of major improvements.

The .253 career hitter, who batted just .246 last season, was batting .367 prior to Tuesday night's game as he's shown an increase in plate discipline throughout the early parts of the season.

Hoskins has shown an ability to lay off on pitches that are high and out of the zone, an area of the zone where he would go chasing last season.

In 2018, Hoskins swung at approximately 16-percent of pitches on the upper half of the outside of the plate. This season, that number has decreased to zero-percent, per Fangraphs.

Hoskins' newfound patience is allowing the slugger to work the count in his favor early on, forcing pitchers to meander inside the strike zone and more into his wheelhouse.

The early returns have been impressive, but it will be imperative for Hoskins to adjust as the season wears on. He made notable regressions down the stretch last season when he batted just .208 in his final 54 games.

Philadelphia's new toys though will ensure that opposing teams can't simply pitch around him as was the case in many instances last season, which makes a repeat of the final two months of last season a bit less likely.
